

Why is evidence important?

Evidence is crucial in delivering the most appropriate and person-centred quality palliative care for all Australians.

Helps us understand the potential benefits and harms of a treatment or intervention

Empowers everyone to ask informed questions and make informed decisions

Provides insights to the most likely outcome of a treatment or intervention across a population

Serves as the basis to drive continuous quality and service improvement

Understanding that palliative care is based on evidence makes consumers more confident about being referred to palliative care

Highlights the need for investment, research, and improved services

CareSearch is funded by the Australian Government Department of Health.
