

How nurses can find and use palliative care information

At some stage in your nursing career, you'll care for someone who is nearing the end of their life. You'll want to provide the best possible palliative care, and CareSearch has evidence-based information to help you.

When you visit www.caresearch.com.au/nurses, you'll see six buttons:

Clinical

Deal with care issues such as advance care planning, care of the spirit, after-death care, communication, complementary therapies, medication management and symptom management.

Education

Curious about providing education or pursuing your own professional development? The 'Education' section will help you with CPD and portfolio development.

Research

The 'Research' section will equip you to be involved in research in the workplace. It explores critical analysis, quality improvement and audits, the role of evidence, and evidence-based practice.

Areas of Practice

Choose 'Areas of Practice' to find resources specific to your field, such as multicultural care, non-malignant /end-stage disease, rural and remote, hospital, oncology, paediatrics, or primary care.

Policy, Quality, Standards

Build a structured and planned approach to quality improvement by using information about policy and planning, public health palliative care, standards, and the Working Together Change Framework.

Nurses Providing Palliative Care

Learn about competencies and standards for practice for nurse practitioners and special interest groups working in palliative care.

You can also access resources like books, podcasts, journals, and websites, or sign up for the newsletter to stay up-to-date on new content and what is happening in the community.

CareSearch information for nurses is free to use and is written by nurses, for nurses.
